Scaphosepalum grande
What an intriguing little cutie! *FS 2.5cm

*FS = Flower Size Ref: <http://www.orchidspecies.com/>

Cattleya jenmanii – T & P

← An exercise in patience, T&P mentioned it has taken 16 years to flower this gem. A long wait but such a delicate bloom with the soft pink of the petals contrasting against the lovely patterning & dark colours in the lip, so pretty.

Paphiopedilum Nitens – Dennys & Janine Angove

Catasetum expansum

Bought several years ago, labelled as above but Geoff is not sure it is the species and not a hybrid

Cynoches Taiwan Gold 'Orange'

Catasetum Orchidglade 'Orchidglade'

Fredclarkeara After Midnight
Geoff believes these two seedlings came from Fred's Sunset Valley Orchids Nursery. Both are flowering for the first time. This hybrid genus is a much better proposition because the flowers last for ages compared with some Catasetums which commonly last only a few days. GF

Fredclarkeara (Fdk.) is an artificial genus produced by breeding Catasetum, Clowesia and Mormodes, a three way cross.

Den. melaleucaphilum – Peter & Jane D'Olier

Dendrobium melaleucaphilum

M.A. Clem & D.L. Jones (Orchidaceae) was first described in 1986 and was previously known as the "large-flowered paperbark form" of Dendrobium tetragonum. It is listed as an endangered species, the main threat to Dendrobium melaleucaphilum is illegal collecting and damage arising from bark stripping to host Melaleuca trees. Repeated burning, clearing and draining have resulted in habitat alteration and degradation.

Originating from Papua New Guinea this intriguing looking flower is perhaps best admired from a distance. According to Mr Google this one smells like rotting flesh – designed to attract it's pollinator - maybe it's a good thing we are not live on the bench!

Bonatea speciosa is a stunning large terrestrial orchid from southern and south eastern Africa. It is supposed to be pretty much deciduous, related to the rain seasons it experiences in its native habitat, but for me the previous year's growth is still green and leafy when the new seasons stems mature and flower. I am likely not properly matching its natural pattern requirements. However, I have grown and flowered it successfully for several years now and even sold a few pieces and managed to recoup some of my earlier losses.

Bonatea has very large underground tubers, something like Dahlia bulbs and their weight makes them highly prone to snapping away from the main growing point when repotting so handling during repot is difficult. I am still learning with this one and I believe I need to give it more light in future to ensure the plant doesn't grow so tall. The tallest flower on this one is 168 cm off the ground. All I have to do is find that special spot with the right conditions to suit it.

Orchids on the table. The lovely green and white standard Paph. is Paphiopedilum Gaymaid 'The Princess', and the yellow wheat sheaf flowered orchid is Dendrochilum javierii from the Philippines. There are a lot of Phallies in the background because the picture is taken on our dining room table where Cynthia grows all our Phallies to flower each year. At present there are about 20 Phallies in trays on the table, all in various stages of flowering.

I was very lucky to obtain the beautiful Gaymaid. It was donated to our Ku-ring-gai raffle one night at a meeting and although I hadn't won a raffle prize for nearly a year, that night one of my numbers came out first. My luck was in.

The Dendrochilum is one of my favourites too. I have quite a few Dendrochilums in my collection and I think the very first one I acquired was javierii's close cousin Dchlm. wenzellii which have the same type of flower and inflorescence as javierii but in red of one shade or another. Both these species grow easily in your shadehouse and reward you every year with a magnificent splash of colour. Great orchids.
